What do I say in which situation? – Matching expressions with professional situations

"Does anyone else wish to add anything to take the discussion further?"

"I would like to point out that we are having extensive talks with the managing director of our business partner."

The speaker is talking to a customer or client. He/She would like his business partner to agree to a deal. The speaker makes a promise.

This sentence might be uttered by a chairman, director or moderator in a meeting who makes sure that all the participants get the opportunity to voice their opinion.

The speaker intends to react to somebody. Before making his/her comment, she announces his/her intention to do so.

"I would like to make a comment on what you have just said."

The speaker seems to be impatient with the conversation partner. He/She asks his/her partner to concentrate on the main aspects of the problem.

The speaker tries to explain that she communicates intensively with the business partner.

"Sorry, I haven't had time to think about this. Would you mind explaining the matter to me?"

"If you agree, we can discuss the problem, but I would prefer it if we don't."

This phrase might be used in a situation in which a colleague or your boss is probably short of time.

"Would you sign the contract on condition that we deliver the goods on time?"

"I am afraid I do not see any chance of putting your ideas into practice."

"I am afraid delays in delivery will vary from two to six days."

The meeting is to take place next day, if I remember correctly.

A colleague or your boss is not informed about the situation you are talking about. He / She expects you to describe the problem to him/her.

Your boss cannot realise your suggestions in a project. This phrase is used in a situation in which an employee's ideas are not accepted.

The speaker communicates with a customer or client because ordered goods or articles cannot be sent on time.
